

I pay for my XM Radio service because I choose to listen to satellite quality audio channels versus the junk on regular (FM/AM) radio channels. Because I pay for this service, it is my right to choose the services I want to receive and not the National Association of Broadcasters or any radio station in my area. If I deemed their services (free or otherwise) worthwhile I would choose to listen and support them, but the fact that I do not is statement enough. I do not agree with the NAB's petition and feel the FCC should reject any such petition which intends to infringe on the services that I pay for and are not under their jurisdiction. They should invest their money in updating the quality and quantity of their services rather than trying to act like Microsoft and bully quality competition.
